GOES BACK TO HOUSE
President to Receive Plan Next Week For Final Action

WASHINGTON, June 14.—(AP)—The 8 months' old tariff bill passed the White House Friday night after the senate, by a vote of 44 to 42, approved the final draft of the Hawley-Smoot measure.

Cry For Action On Gangland

No Indication Of New Clues or Results in Lingle Death

CHICAGO, June 4.—(AP)—The cry for action in the hunt for the slayer of Alfred (Jake) Lingle, Tribune reporter, rose higher and higher Friday, but with no indication from authorities of any new clues or of any prospect of immediate results.

Indignation over the murder was fast translating itself into criticism of the city administration, and the Chicago crime commission, which one minister classified as "a lot of bunk." Dr. Yarrow, chairman of the political action committee of the Chicago Federation of Churches called for a mass meeting for the expression of the ministry's "indignation" over crime conditions.

There was no lack of police activity as motor squads cruised through every part of the city, making arrests but though the police net was drawn tight, the grist of arrests showed no well known gangsters. Indeed, as officials admitted, out of the more than 600 men arrested, only a small percentage could be classed as gangsters. Mostly they were nondescript, minor hoodlums and "bums."

Leaders of the Methodist, Lutheran and Presbyterian denominations announced that within a week expected to have a unified expression of indignation. Dr. John Thompson, pastor of the First Methodist church, announced the opening of a campaign of education against crime from every Methodist pulpit in Chicago.

Brown in the leading roles. Abounding in rapid-fire, hilarious comedy and boasting several new which were featured in the original song hits in addition to two numbers shown in this latest Warner Bros. production comes as lively, tuneful, uproarious entertainment, one of the gayest, romantic musical comedies to come to the audible screen.

Winnie Lightner, who, if it is humanly possible, seems even funnier than in "Gold Diggers," runs riot throughout the entire picture, pursuing Joe Brown with ardent declarations of love and singing one song hit after the other with typical Lightner abandon. And Joe E. Brown, when he isn't dodging "Wild" Winnie, spends most of his time telling every one what a great fellow he is. Brown, who is a former stage star and whose success on the audible screen has been the talk of Hollywood, is seen, and heard in the liveliest, peppiest role of his career. Together, he and Winnie form one of the most amusing comedy teams to grace a picture since the screen was given a voice.

Sally O'Neill and Georges Carpentier, the former boxing idol of France who recently scored a success in the music halls of Paris, play the romantic leads, sing several songs together and all in all, add charm and distinction to this screen adaptation of "Hold Everything."

The songs featured in this picture and sung by Winnie Lightner, Sally O'Neill, Georges Carpentier and Joe E. Brown are "When the Little Red Roses Get the Blues for You," "Sing a Little Theme Song," "Isn't This a Cockeyed World?" and two well known hits of the original production, "You're the Cream of My Coffee," and "Don't Hold Everything."

In the supporting cast are Bert Roach, Edmund Breese and Abe Lyman and his famous recording orchestra.

"Hold Everything," which was directed by Roy Del Ruth and photographed throughout in Technicolor, will be shown at the Saenger Theatre next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

"Arizona Kid" at Grand Three Days

Scenic Backgrounds For "The Arizona Kid" Are Of Rare Beauty

"It was a long way from Hollywood but I was never so happy," Miss Maris, the Argentine beauty who scored so heavily in "Romance of Rio Grande" with Warner Baxter, was speaking of her experiences in filming "The Arizona Kid," a great outdoor romance on Movietone in which she again appears opposite Baxter.

"It was all much of a surprise," Miss Maris said. "Although I have been in this country for a year and a half, I had never been away from the big cities. As a child I used to see 'Westerns' and wonder if such scenery really existed, and even on making 'Romance of Rio Grande,' we never got much beyond a barren desert."

"When they told me I was to go to Utah for two months to film 'The Arizona Kid' I made all kinds of preparations. Alfred Santell, the director, said we would live only in tents, that there was no light or heat or water, and that we would have to 'rough it' all the time. So I brought boxes full of candles, and a portable oil stove, and dozens of bottles of alcohol for bathing purposes, and a trunk full of blankets."

"We got to the railroad at Cedar City, Utah, and encountered plenty of snow. I shivered. And then we went down about 3000 feet in fifty miles, driving to the camp, and found the weather just like Hollywood. Instead of tents, we had comfortable cabins, with coal stoves and electric lights, and a shower bath and everything—even to rugs and easy chairs. All my carefully purchased articles were useless. But the country there, on the edge of Zion National Park and its wonderful mountains and buttes, is so glorious that I didn't mind the joke the director had played on me."

Screen fans who enjoyed "In Old Arizona," Baxter's first Western talkie are sure to be delighted with "The Arizona Kid," according to preview reports. The picture opens at the Grand theatre Monday for a two day run.

Shaw Puzzles Brick Makers

Manufacturers Told How To Select Salesmen For Business

BUXTON, Eng., June 14.—(UP)—George Bernard Shaw has given some one some advice and it didn't cost them a cent!

As guest of honor at the Clay Convention dinner, whereat sat manufacturers of building and engineering bricks and tiles and other heavy clay goods, Shaw was asked to speak.

He first revealed that he made his book appealing by seeing that the cover was attractive.

"If I were in the clay industry and required a salesman I wouldn't look for him in the clay business," Shaw said. "I would attend all variety theatres in the country and when I found a man who was a great artist at patter, making a proper joke at the right moment, raising a laugh, I would say to that man, 'Go into the clay industry.'"

The diners listened and, it is said, some wondered afterward what connection there was between a joke and a brick as far as selling clay was concerned.

"The Texan" Will Open At Saenger

Gary Cooper Here Friday and Saturday in O. Henry Story

The short stories of O. Henry are known to most everyone. As a matter of fact, many of them have found their way to the screen, the most recent being "A Double-Dyed Detective," which Paramount has just made under the new title of "The Texan," with Gary Cooper in the title role.

The popularity of O. Henry stories too, is easy to understand. For O. Henry had the gift not only of spinning a good yarn, but also of giving each story a surprise twist just when of his own. And these so-called twists the reader has come to a conclusion are not merely idle pranks of a writer intent on fooling the reader but in reality, an added touch, a glimpse into the unaccountable wiles of human nature which O. Henry revealed, not by psychological reasoning but by straight-forward story telling.

As produced on the talking screen, "The Texan" emerges as an absorbing picture, retaining the suspense-filled qualities of the original story. As a matter of fact, the imaginative direction, the splendid acting of Gary Cooper and his supporting cast and the picture's eye-filling photograph are so effectively blended into one solid unit, that, without doubt "The Texan" takes its place as one of the most interesting pictures of the new year. It has all those qualities that make a picture popular with audiences. There is fast-moving, vital action, a dreamy romance and the usual O. Henry twist that makes possible a thrilling and unexpected climax.

Gary Cooper plays the role of the Llano Kid, the hard-riding Texas cowboy who, with suave crook, goes to South America, posing as the lost son of a wealthy and aristocratic Senora. There he meets the beautiful Consuelo, played by Fay Wray, a distant cousin of the family, with whom he falls in love. But the Llano Kid has not come to fall in love, neither is he there to be pampered and babied by the old Senora who, unsuspectingly, accepts him as her own son. He is there as an adventurer and gambler, to steal the family gold at the very first opportunity. But despite everything, he becomes fond of the Senora and is lost in reverie at the beauty of Consuelo. But just when he decides to put all sentimental thoughts aside and go on with his scheme, he makes two startling discoveries. One is that the man he killed in Texas was the real son of the Senora and the other is that the sheriff who swore to track him down is now at the ranch. There is a thrilling climax as the Llano Kid, for the first time in his life obeys the dictates of his heart. And there is still the O. Henry climatic twist, caused by the subtle screen, and dramatically more intense than in the printed story.

Gary Cooper of course, is splendid as the Llano Kid. It undoubtedly is one of the finest roles of his career. And Fay Wray as Consuelo is beautiful to look upon and a delight to listen to. Others on the cast who do good work are Oscar Apfel, Emma Dunn and James Marcus.

"The Texan," which John Cromwell directed, comes to the Saenger Theatre next Friday and Saturday.

Buddy Rogers in New Saenger Film

"Safety in Numbers" To Play Here Sunday and Monday

What Lindbergh is doing for aviation, Charles "Buddy" Rogers is doing for entertainment—in "Safety in Numbers," the modern music-romance coming to the Saenger Theatre Sunday and Monday.

Here is the amusement element that "Buddy" reveals in, the type of picture that singles him out as an ace of versatility.

"Safety in Numbers" is slightly reminiscent of "Close Harmony"—but it is so far superior to that picture of the early days of talkies that a comparison is unfair. In fact, "Safety in Numbers" is far and away superior to any of the screen musical romances that have ever been produced.

Here are all the ingredients of pure, unalloyed fun—genuine amusement in its most diverting form. A modern story, with just enough of the spice of sophistication; dialog which crackles with humor; melodies fresh and different, with lyrics that sparkle with cleverness; settings that intrigue the eye with their deft presentation of things up-to-the-minute, and which will please the ladies particularly in gowns and lingerie that cost Paris.

But above all is "Buddy," the actor's Boy Friend, giving the screen display of his effervescent personality he has ever exhibited on the screen. He sings, dances, plays the trombone, plays the piano, sings some more, falls in love with five gorgeous charmers, writes a hit-song for the "Follies," sells it to a big Broadway producer, bawls out Broadway guys, gets into a fist fight with a driver, loves some more girls, writes some more songs, sings and dances again.

It's the biggest consignment of picture cuisine "It" that any one picture delivered to a romance-loving, letter-loving, music loving America.

West Point for the Air

How the army's future air fighters will be trained in the world's largest and best flying field, a $50,000,000 school which will be dedicated this month near San Antonio and which will incorporate a mile-square perfect Spanish city surrounded by an airport big enough for 250 planes to take off at once

General F. P. Lahm, commanding the Eighth Corps Area . . . is a sort of godfather to Randolph Field . . . host at its dedication.

By ERNEST T. PYLE

DOWN on the prairies of Texas, a spot which in years to come will doubtless acquire the same dignity and romance of tradition that now surrounds the American West Point, will be dedicated next Friday and Saturday, June 20-21.

It is Randolph Field—the "West Point of the Air," the largest flying field in the world, the U. S. Army's most beautiful post, a $50,000,000 military dream come true. It is 16 miles northeast of San Antonio.

It doesn't look much like a great flying field yet, though you can pick out its checkerboard pattern of gravel roads and half-finished buildings from an airplane as far as 20 miles away.

Two years ago Randolph Field was nothing more than 2300 acres of mesquite and wooded land, with a few dirt roads running through it, and a few houses and barns on it.

Today it is a torn-up 2300 acres, graded and leveled and full of tractors and plows, with a queer hodge-podge of a village beginning to take form in its center.

Two years from now it will be a green, sod-covered flying field two and a half miles across in every direction, with a Spanish city of 5000 population in the middle, probably the most perfectly planned city in the world.

There every man who is to be an aviator in Uncle Sam's Army will go to school. There students will live and fly under ideal conditions. Their "campus" will be a green mirage on a Texas prairie, as beautiful in its way as West Point is to the regular line officer. The students will build into it their own traditions. When they come out, they will be "Randolph Men." Every cadet who wins the much-sought appointment to the Army Air Corps will go to Randolph.

AS soon as the first unit of the field is ready, probably a year from now, the primary training school at March Field, Riverside, Calif., will be moved in. When the next section is ready, the primary school at Brooks Field, on the other side of San Antonio, will go over.

Eventually the advanced training school now at Kelly Field may be moved in, but this question is still up in the air and will not be decided until the field is in use and officers can determine just how congested the air traffic is to become.

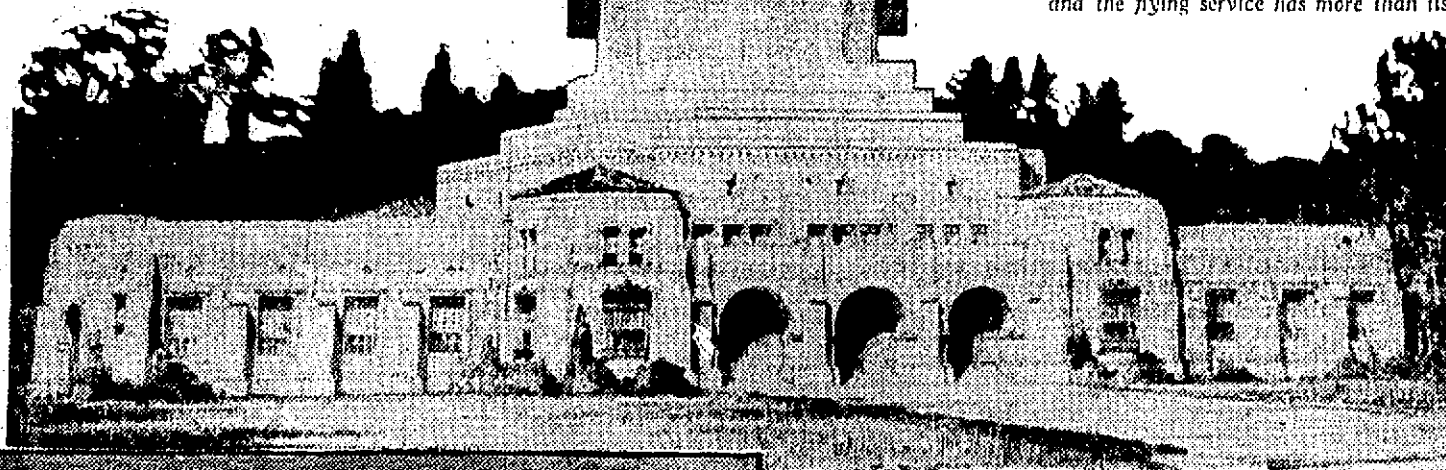

Scores of airplanes and the high military officials of the nation will be at the dedicatory exercises this week. San Antonio is full of civic pride over this newest and greatest of flying fields, and the city's pride is just, for it bought the land and gave it to the government.

"San Antonio" is remembered with fondness by thousands of young men who tasted of its graciousness and hospitality in war-time. It has kept up that reputation in its friendship toward peace-time soldiers, and is still a very "military minded" town. Men who soldier in any of the many camps around San Antonio like it there.

Randolph Field is the latest link in the chain of flying fields surrounding San Antonio, making it the greatest military flying center in the world. There are already four Army fields within a few miles of San Antonio. Kelly and Duncan Fields lie to the southwest, Brooks Field to the southeast, Fort Sam Houston landing field to the north. Nearly half of all the flying done by the Army Air Corps is done around San Antonio. In addition to all this, there are several commercial flying fields there. And besides there are other Army posts, camps and repair depots. Uncle Sam has $140,000,000 invested in that area in his military establishments.

THE Army has been thinking about a Utopian flying school for a long time. It has drawn plans, figured figures, dreamed dreams for years. Then a few years ago the city of San Antonio bought 2300 acres of land and sold it to the government for $1. That was how Randolph Field started.

Work began early in 1929. The job was turned over

The Officers' Mess . . . Meal-time Mecca for the post's bachelor flyers . . . and the flying service has more than its share of unmarried men.

The Administration Building . . . will command the entrance, the only tall building on the field. . . . Its tower will house a huge water supply tank, meteorological station, field beacon.

From the air, Randolph Field already begins to show its character. . . . The white lines indicate the plan of the interior city . . . and the leveled fields stretching away on all sides show the vastness of the projected landing fields, two and a half miles across in every direction.

to the Quartermaster Corps. Colonel Arthur W. Parker was placed in charge of building the field. The first task was clearing and grubbing. Houses and fences were torn down. One hundred and eighty acres of timber land was cleared.

The Quartermaster Corps bought plows and tractors and graders. The high spots were dragged down, the low spots filled. Every bit of the land was plowed once. Some of it was plowed, harrowed and rolled as many as three times. It had to be perfectly level.

Then roads were put in, gravel roads. They were laid for permanence, on the exact plan in which they will be when the city in the center of the big field is finished. The gravel forms a base, and when all the heavy building traffic over these roads is done, they will be covered with concrete or asphalt.

Next was the question of water. There had to be a large water supply for building work. They started drilling wells.

Nine were drilled together. These are considered sufficient for the permanent needs of the school. They can spout 2,160,000 gallons of water a day.

The gravel for the roads came out of gravel pits right on the field. Where the gravel came out, the sewage disposal plant went in. Two birds with one stone. Sixteen miles of gravel roads were extracted from that pit. It was a huge task. Building has started now, has been going on several months, and 2000 builders swarm like ants over the field.

After the roads and the wells, came the sodding. All this great field must be grass-covered. They planted the largest lawn in the world down there—400 acres of Bermuda grass. More is being sown all the time.

(Copyright, 1930, By EveryWeek Magazine—Printed in U. S. A.)

RANDOLPH FIELD is an innovation in air port building. Since the inception of flight, air ports have been built with the landing area in the center, and all the hangars and other buildings around the edges. The Army thinks that that idea, especially in a big field, is wrong. So Randolph Field's hangars, barracks and other buildings are in the center, and the landing area runs clear around the outside.

The field is octagonal in shape, and two and a half miles across in every direction. The "city" in the middle is a mile square. There is only one entrance, a double roadway leading in from the north. The rest of the field is clear and unobstructed.

This little "flying city" itself will eventually have a population of 5000 persons. It will be a complete city within itself. It will have to go to San Antonio for only one thing—electric current.

And even then it has an auxiliary plant of its own, in case San Antonio fails.

There will be nothing of conventional military design about this city. Officers' homes will not be uniform buildings as at other posts; each will be of a different size, shape and architecture. The only uniformity is that all will be of Spanish design. The entire city will be Spanish. Architects even went to study the old Spanish missions in Texas for ideas.

In the center of the city will be a large circular drive. From this will extend barracks in three directions, soldiers' barracks on east and west, cadet barracks on the south.

Just as the cities of old were protected from the outside world by a great wall, Randolph City will be walled in on three sides by airplane hangars. They will line the east, south and west edges of the city—26 of them. They will face outward, and in front of them will be a continuous concrete apron 150 feet wide. Beyond that, the immense flying field.

In this city will be a hospital, school for the children, a chapel, a theater seating 1150 persons, a community center, a $60,000 gymnasium, 36 tennis courts, seven swimming pools, a clubhouse.

THERE will not be a speck of dust in the city. Every inch that is not taken up by roadways will be sodded. Native trees and shrubbery will line the streets and dot the yards. A nursery has even been started for the propagation of trees and flowers.

All buildings will be of masonry. The Army believes it has designed a perfect city, and it is building it to endure. Officers' quarters will be of hollow tile, concrete and stucco, with tile roofs. All will be of one or two stories.

mansion, and it will cost $25,000. There will be nearly 800 buildings in the city. There will be 359 homes for married officers and their families, spaced 80 feet apart. The sod for their lawns alone will cost $110,000. These homes will cost from $12,500 to $14,500 each.

There will be homes for 122 bachelor commissioned officers. (The Air Corps has a great many bachelors—more, they say, than any other branch of the service.)

There will be two-family homes for 352 non-commissioned officers and their families. There will be barracks for 2200 enlisted men. There will be other barracks for hundreds of cadet flyers. All will be built and furnished to afford comfort for the occupants. Soldiering at Randolph Field will be something to remember.

In the northwest corner of the city will be the great airplane shops, where all the rebuilding and heavy repair work will be done. In the northeast corner will be the athletic fields.

OF all this vast project, only a relatively small part has been completed. In the first unit of construction are one 300-man barracks, five 250-man barracks, and two warehouses. This unit is practically finished.

As soon as sufficient shops, hangars and officers' quarters have been constructed, the Air Corps will move in, and flying will start.

Centralization of student activity will not mean that the Army will materially change its course of instruction. This course has been worked out through years of study and trial and error, and is recognized throughout the world as one of the best in existence. It is admitted that there are no better flyers than those turned out by the U. S. Army. No doubt even better training can be given at Randolph Field with its superior equipment and facilities. It will have a wealth of planes and classrooms and instructors, and best of all, plenty of room.

Flying students need lots of room. A whole squadron of planes manned by experienced pilots can operate in unison from one small field. But an equal number of planes manned by novice pilots must have plenty of space, both on the ground and in the air, in which to wallow around.

They will have it at Randolph. The flying area will be so large that 250 airplanes can take off at once, in formation. Although they will not be separated, there will be in reality four large fields, one on each side of "Randolph City."

The cost of this new center for aerial training is tremendous. It has been estimated that when everything is finished, and the field completely equipped with airplanes, the cost will run up somewhere around $50,000,000. Within a few years it is the plan of the War Department to have 360 planes, worth $4,000,000, stationed there. Eventually the number will be increased to 500. Even then the field will not be crowded, it is believed.

Randolph Field was made necessary by the general progress and expansion of military aviation, and the Army's desire of many years' standing to concentrate its flying instruction work in one completely-equipped field—which would become in every sense, the "West Point of the Air."

HOOKS and SLIDES

by William Braucher

That Future Shuffle
The Hudkins brothers of Nebraska moved into Los Angeles in 1934 with no money in their pockets. One of the boys, Ace, was his name, and he was only 20 years old—claimed he was a fighter. The brothers secured Los Angeles fight clubs, hunting a match for Ace so they all could eat.

Ace is not quite 26 now. The lanky complexion and pleasant features he took to California with him have been altered. His nose is spread and bashed in. His face is scarred and dented and pained. Although he's still less than 26 years of age, he's a long way from being the boy he used to be.

A few more fights and I'll quit the game," the Ace told a friend recently. The love for fighting apparently has faded. Possibly he only wants to avoid a fate that has overtaken other fighters of his class. The Hudkins brand of milling and tearing in has put many a ringster on round heels and added a shuffle to his walk.

Drew the Customers

HUDKINS' fights were popular in California. In fact, they were popular almost every place for the "Nebraska Wildcat" was a crowd pleaser, with his indomitable courage for boring into his opponent's and his wild reckless fighting that furnished action through every minute of a three-minute round.

California's gold clinked merrily on nights that the Ace fought. He raked something like half a million dollars for his scraps in the Golden State. The Ace's share of this amount if it had been invested properly would be enough to keep him in sport roadsters and white flannels for a long time. But he didn't invest it properly.

The easy money rolled through Ace's pockets. There was nothing to do about any of his brother's earnings. Seldom did they out-earn anybody for the dinner table. Now, of the $300,000 Ace claims to have earned in his fights, less than $25,000 is his.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

SCOUT BILL ESKICK of the Yanks is on the trail of Meryl Hong, sensational pasture-patroller of the Sacramento Solons in the coast circuit. . . . Owner Lew Moreing asked $50,000 for him last year and the value is said to have trebled this semester. . . . And what's we're on the subject, Connie Mack has offered in a letter to Larry Wilbur, his coast league scout, to pay $75,000 for Frank Crosetti, San Francisco Seals' shortstopper. . . . It is said that the letter mentioned something about Joe Doley having seen his best days. . . . When Billy Evans saw Jimmy Zinn of the Cleveland Indians to the Seals, along with John Millus, he predicted that the Arkansas right-hander would be a pitching sensation in the western circuit. . . . Here's one prediction the ex-ump missed; Zinn has been a riot. . . . If a no-hit no-run game and a one-hit no-run game within a week doesn't constitute a riot, pray tell what does?

and the government has that tied up while they check his earnings.

Made $265,000 With Walker

THE second bout between 'Hudkins and Mickey Walker, midweight champion, set a record for California fight gates. Receipts of that tussle counted up to $150,000. In his first attempt to wrest the crown from the middleweight champion at Chicago in 1925, only $115,000 was paid in at the windows. Walker the Nebraskan drew big gates in every one of his major fights in California. Golden State fans paid $50,000 to see him go up with Tommy O'Brien, $40,000 with Bert Colima, $35,000 with Lew Tindler, $33,000 with Sergeant Sammy Baker, $25,000 with Joe Anderson, and $51,000 with Armand Enautel.

The new rate for the first 1,000 feet and 50 cents for each additional 1,000 feet, with a five per cent discount when bills are paid within 10 days, which is only a slight increase over the old rates but much lower than the rate sought by the company.

Stock Judges Seek Honors

Experts in livestock judging, these three Oklahoma farm youths have won a trip to Europe this summer to compete for international honors. Left to right: Stanley Kennedy, James Childers and Felix King.

STILLWATER, Okla., June 10.—(AP)—Champions of the United States, three Oklahoma farm youths are going abroad this summer to seek international honors in dairy cattle judging.

The three boys, James Childers of Garland county, and Stanley Kennedy and Felix King of Carter county, will represent their country against a team of young English farmers and three youthful Canadians.

They will compete for the international crown at the Royal Agricultural Show at Manchester, England, July 9.

The winners of the contest will be named world champions and will be awarded the $1,000 loving cup presented by the London Daily Mail.

The trophy is now in keeping of the Oklahoma 4-H club department as a result of a victory in the 1929 international contest.

American teams have won four times in the world title competition, and the English teams have won three times.

This is the first time, however, that one state has represented the United States in two successive contests.

The three Oklahoma youths sailed from Quebec June 6. They were accompanied by John Boehr, dairy specialist of Oklahoma.

American and British agricultural leaders will entertain them before and after they leave America.

President Hoover, Secretary of Agriculture Hyde and C. W. Warburton, director of the United States department of agriculture, will receive the boys before they sail.

A Real Fish Story

The kind of luck that deep-sea fishermen dream about was the lot of Marion Edwards and Greta Gage these two Baytown, California, girls who went fishing for a barracuda.

One of them hooked a barracuda, but before she could pull in her victim the giant black sea bass shown here had swallowed it. After two hours the two girls managed to land the big fish.

As Gallant Fox Took Revenge

Low Blow Puts Max Down

Max In a "Dempsey Crouch"
